Contents

1 Introducing Critical Participatory Action Research 1
Why We Wrote this Book 1
The Changing Field of Action Research 4
The Things Only Participatory Research Can Do 4
An Example: Recycling at Braxton High School, Canada 7
Action Research History: Different Kinds, Foci and Purposes of Action Research 8
Different Kinds of Action Research 8
Changing foci of Action Research in Education 12
Different Purposes of Action Research 14
Critical Participatory Action Research as a Disciplined Way of Making Change 18
The People who Typically Conduct Critical Participatory Action Research 21
An Example in Education 23
Blurring Boundaries: Theorists and Practitioners, Researchers and Practitioners 25
Critical Participatory Action Research as a Practice-Changing Practice 26

2 A New View of Participation: Participation in Public Spheres 33
Participation in Communication 33
Communicative Action and Communicative Space 34
Ten Key Features of Public Spheres: Comments for Critical Participatory Action Researchers 37
Conclusion: 'Participation' in Critical Participatory Action Research is Participation in Public Spheres 48

3 A New View of Practice: Practices Held in Place by Practice Architectures 51
Defining Practice 51
Practices and Practice Architectures 53

Practices and Practice Architectures in Critical Participatory Action Research 59
Critical Participatory Action Research as a Practice-Changing Practice 63

4 A New View of Research: Research Within Practice Traditions 67
What's Critical about Critical Participatory Action Research? 67
Research Perspectives in Critical Participatory Action Research 70
Critical Participatory Action Research as a Kind of Research 73
Researching Practice from within Practice Traditions 76
Using the Practice Architectures Analysis Table to Find a Felt Concern that will be the Focus of a Critical Participatory Action Research Initiative 80

5 Doing Critical Participatory Action Research: The 'Planner' Part 85
Practising Critical Participatory Action Research 85
Critical Participatory Action Research in Education: Are Our Practices Educational? 87
Reconnaissance 89
Opening Communicative Space—Establishing a Public Sphere 90
Dialogues Between System and Lifeworld, Strategic Action and Communicative Action 92
Questions to Identify a Shared Felt Concern in Relation to Our Practices and What Holds Our Practices in Place 95
An Initial Statement About What you Intend to Do 98
Planning 100
Changing Practices and Practice Architectures 102
The Product of Planning—A Collective Rationale and Plan for Change 103
Enacting the Plan and Observing How it Works 105
Enacting and Observing: The Product 107
Reflection 108
Reflection: The Product 112
The Spiral of Cycles of Self-Reflection 112

6 Examples of Critical Participatory Action Research 115
Example 1: The Recycling Project at Braxton High School, Canada 115
Determining Issues of Importance to Students Through Focus Groups 115
Analysing and Interpreting Students' Felt Concerns 116
Focusing on Students' Concerns About the Environment 116
Shaping Projects with Volunteer Teachers 116
Administering a Survey to Determine Whether Recycling Habits were Problematic 117
Purchasing and Publicizing Recycling Bins 118

Monitoring Recycling Habits and Meeting to Discuss What to do Next 118
Pooling Ideas to Solve Problems 119
Presenting Findings, and Re-Energizing the Group 119
Getting Involved with Other Students and Teachers to Keep Momentum 119
Example 2: The Self-Directed Learning Project at Grace Elementary School, Canada 120
Determining How to Begin 121
Gathering Students' Feedback 122
Analysing Students' Feedback 122
Responding to Students' Feedback Involves Many People 122
Keeping Virtual Journals to Report Back to the Community 123
Shaping Self-Directed Learning Time by Visiting Another School 123
Living Self-Directed Learning Time 124
Addressing Tensions Between Project-Based Learning and Test-Focused Understandings of Learning 124
Reflecting on the Value of Self-Directed Learning 125
Example 3: The Graphic Novel Project at Joseph Junior High School, Canada 125
Gathering Student Feedback 126
Analysing Students' Feedback with Students 126
Planning and Learning About Visual and Digital Texts with Students 127
Reflecting on the Value of Multimodal (Print, Visual, Digital) Explorations with Students 127
Example 4: The Teacher Talk Project in an Australian University 127
Example 5: The Yirrkala Ganma Education Project: Critical Participatory Action Research in an Indigenous Community 135
The Concept of Ganma 138
Ganma Education And The Practice Of Critical Participatory Action Research 141
Conclusion 146

7 Resources for Critical Participatory Action Researchers 149
Resource 1: Creating a Public Sphere and Identifying a Shared Felt Concern 149
Identifying Educational Legitimation Deficits 152
Identifying More General Legitimation Deficits 153
Resource 2: Some Notes on Research Ethics for Critical Participatory Action Researchers 158
General Principles of Research Ethics: Respecting Persons, Avoiding Harm, Justice and Beneficence 159
Informed Consent and Assent 160
Dependent Relationships 162

Confidentiality and Anonymity 163
Mutual Trust and Mutual Vulnerability 164
Additional Reading 167
Resource 3: Critical Participatory Action Research Group Protocols: Ethical Agreements for Participation in Public Spheres 168
Resource 4: Principles of Procedure for Action Researchers 172
Establish Working Rules for the Collaborating Group: 172
Observe Protocol 172
Involve Participants 173
Negotiate with Those Affected 173
Report Progress 173
Obtain Explicit Authorisation before You Observe 173
Negotiate Descriptions of People's Work and Accounts of Others' Points of View 173
Negotiate Reports for Various Levels of Release 174
Accept Responsibility for Maintaining Confidentiality 174
Retain the Right to Report Your Work 174
Make Your Principles of Procedure Binding and Known 174
Resource 5: Keeping a Journal 175
Resource 6: Gathering Evidence, Documenting 176
Some Cautionary Notes 186
Resource 7: Reporting: For Yourself and Others 187
Reporting Action Research Undertaken as Part of a Course of Study 188
Resource 8: Choosing an Academic Partner to Work with a Critical Participatory Action Research Initiative 189
